I) stick around J) snacks K) secondary L) necessary

M) principles N) committed O) desirable

Creating lifetime readers is the _____ outcome of any school. But why do schools fail to do so? It is _____ for parents and educators to notice two basic and related _____ or facts. The first fact is that human beings are pleasure-centred. We are voluntarily _____ to that which brings us pleasure. For example, we select the restaurants we like, and pick _____ we like in the supermarket, listen to the radiostations that play the music we like.

Conversely, we avoid the restaurants, snacks and music we dislike.

What does this pleasure principle have to do with reading? Children love stories, so every time we read to a child at home or at school, we send a "pleasure" message to the child's brain. You could even call it a commercial, conditioning the child to _____ a connection between books and pleasure. However, _____, parents don't want to _____ a bit of their off-work time to read to their children: and, to make matters worse, schools send "unpleasure" messages about reading. Endless hours of work-sheets, intensive phonics instruction, and seemingly unconnected test questions can be — to a child — tedious or boring. If a child seldom experiences the fun of reading at home and meets only the "unpleasure" at school, the natural reaction will be avoidance, and this idea tends to _____ till adulthood.

The second basic fact is that reading is an accumulated skill. In other words, reading is like riding a bicycle, driving a car: in order to get better at it, you must do it. The last twenty-five years of reading research confirms this simple formula. _____ sex, race, nationality, or socioeconomic background, the students who read the most are the ones who read the best, achieve the most, and stay in school the longest.

Part IV

The reason for a country or a nation to achieve independence in the world is that it is made up of many components. Those components, such as culture, customs and economy, form a solid whole. Another more significant part is the language of the nation. In this combination of components, language serves externally as a shield, and internally as blood and adhesives. The Chinese nation is powerful and united, thanks to its unifying of language as early as in the Qin Dynasty. Moreover, the government made efforts to promote Putonghua in the 1950s, trying its best to further unify the language. Since language is part of the life of a nation, we should protect it like protecting our eyes.
